Networked Governance of Freedom and Tyranny (2012) draws all this together with the argument that networked struggles for justice, peace and freedom are the mainstay of progressive politics in the kind of world we inhabit today. For most tasks of modern governance, networks get things done better than hierarchies.

Networked governance | John Braithwaite

Networked governance for freedom is not mainly about replacing political leaders who believe in a politics of domination with politicians who do not, desirable as this is. It is not about replacing business leaders who ruthlessly exploit workers, consumers and the environment to maximise profits with disciples of corporate social
