The BW350 used an air-cooled, four-stroke single-cylinder 350 engine, quite similar to the engine used in the Warrior ATV (back in those days, there was lots of parts bin engineering going on with Yamaha's smaller-displacement motorcycles). It didn't make a ton of power, but it certainly made more than the other big wheel bikes.

A rider can't get off their dirt bike and float it across four feet of water, but a BW rider can. A dirt bike needs speed and suspension to tackle a steep hill. A BW just needs a Wooly Booger and whatever speed the rider chooses. A BW is like riding a ATV and dirt bike at the same time. In other words, they handle like the rider has no idea ...
